For all your worry and your weeping, for all your pain and woe, just try some good old-fashioned sleeping-the finest cure I know. "Ah, yes," you say, "such talk is easy, well men may hand it out; but when with asthma one is wheezy, or when he has the gout, or when black care with him is drilling, all sleepless are his eyes; he cannot slumber for a shilling, no matter how he tries. So speaks the timid human rabbit, filled with forebodings dire; yet sleep, like kicking, is a habit that sick folks may acquire. When I am sick I travel bedward, and lock my chamber door, ward, and lock my chamber door, and say, "So help me, Albert Edward. I'll sleep or bust a snore! I count some sheep imaginary cavorting o'er a stile; such animals are flip and merry, and always make me smile; I watch those muttons, soiled and frowsy their long procession keep, and pretty soon I'm feeling drowsy and then I am asleep. At first I counted seven billion before I got repose, but now, when I reach half a million, I nearly always doze. You watch your ewes and lambkins mounting the stile, a deluge deep; you keep on counting, counting, counting, until you fall asleep. WALT MASON.
